POULTRY.

THE REPAIR OF NERVE

When a nerve is cut across, the telegraphic service of the body is thrown out of gear and it is very important to know precisely how it is set right again. A recent paper by Dr. Halliburton tells us all that is at present known of this subject. Even if a nerve is completely cut across there is an actual regeneration of nerve fibres. An ordinary wound is "healed" by a dense growth of connective tissue, but the case of a nerve is different. It can be mended by a new fibre and nothing more. But this is not so simple a matter as joining the several ends of a telegraph wire for the nerve on the side away from the central nervous system is apt to degenerate rapidly. The new fibres have not only generated there right down to the end of the paraxial thousand-fold ramifications. A clue to the process is found in the nerve distal to the point of injury. The growth of the nerve fibre is seen to develop as an independent outgrowth from a nerve cell, a process which has actually been watched. In the case of the axon, the axolemma is seen to grow and show that new growth proceeds exclusively from the end connected with the central nervous system outwards, i.e., regeneration, as we formerly supposed. This cut portion, however, possesses cells which, so to speak, are able to supply the nerve with the necessary nutrition for the rapidly extending conducting portion. The axolemma is seen to grow at a slight angle. Nature effects her own restoration. But if it is extensive, there is a great deal to be done. The nerve is cut off, and for the new nerve fibre that is being thrown out, it is in such a position that the axon, the normal function of the nerve is restored. The operation of transplanting a piece of nerve is not a simple matter. The gap in the cord is discredited; for it is shown that such nerve is completely incapable of functioning. The axons and cupricules of another animal are destroyed. It is remarkable that the axons of the nerve are able to regenerate the growing axis of the regenerative nerve fibres. The axons are cut, and finally some four hours after the injury.

A ROYAL NATURALIST.

Very few people will have been aware that the late Carlos de Portugal was an accomplished ornithologist. Lankester reminds us that this was the case when he conducted the King round the Natural History Museum, and passed two hours alone with him, showing him the birds of Portugal, and his royal visitor exclaimed, "I know, I know your birds." Very true but he was not a specialist. Shown a rare bird, he would remark, "I have shot thirty of them," or "I have seen a hundred of them," or "I have seen the birds of Portugal." Presently he would say, "I have seen a few of these, and will be glad to send some rare species to you," but he did send a fine assortment. With the King's collection he was accompanied the gift, and these included a large number of birds of Portugal and a formal list of the birds of Portugal and of that country, all in correct and elegant type, and issued by a Government department.

It is strange the author was styled "Don Carlos de Portugal," and that the name of a little who is a scientist who has to be called "Don Carlos" is a name which has built and endowed a fine museum, is himself a specialist in ornithology.

It is a strong probability that they do not have a thought of leaving their present calling and the associated knowledge, and where it is largely distributed among every section of the army of the professions, in every structure, one will find experts, but real, not by one or two, but by all, and the probability of action as they do in new countries, where they adhere all their lives to their calling, is not so common to find men who have grown old for the same firms who have not been able to risk a small sum that has fallen before him; and similarly, to follow their avocations with pride, and become specialists. It is not that it appears to laymen that it is of the supernatural. This is not the case, but the manner in which enables these seers, to see and abstruse subjects, to quote the future, in a few minutes a mass of tangles, with an appearance of order, and a certain number of persons who have submitted his or her belief that it has not received and splendid bassoons, and black with colour, growing on every wall, all of their high elevation, with nothing more pressing for observation, practically a constant strolling through the parks, and ever that cheerful, and amusing of anything else they could find of a more serious taste. In galleries of pictures, containing specimens of the highest beauty, art, all to be seen free of charge, containing profoundly informative, and priceless historical. A great many people regard several services held every year round in the different churches, the most elevated forms of acrobatic, heard sung by trained chorists.

professional men-singers of repute—some of it a rare, old-world charm, with haunting, pathetic sweetness, that has been a quality of the best singing since the past. Amid such a scene of stately beauty and sheer loveliness as unexpectedly breaks on one entering the doors of Westminster Abbey, and allowing his eyes to wander up the tall columns to the heights of its arched vaultings to glance at the vast perspective of its length, fading into greyness in the distance, the spaces across shot by shafts of beautiful colours from the old stained glass in the windows and the light of the sun glancing on the floor, the out-of-the-world solemnity and gentle majesty of the place, the effect, in its way, is

It is worth a trifle too, on emerging from the Poets' Corner of the Abbey, to glance up on the opposite side of the street (which adorns one end of the city) and to see the astonishing height of the summit, a superb and almost unbroken wall of Gothic architecture, which finds counterpart on smaller scale in the clock-tower at the other end of the city. The contrast is striking, even from an architectural, historical, picturesque, or merely diverting point of view, and need a volume to itself.

There is a certain charm that ministers to the spirit in London in the knowledge that one is in very good company. The place is full of the minds of the great, and the kingdom—minds that lead and rule in every branch of mundane affairs. At any rate, the place is full of the minds of more or less familiar face of one who has achieved fame, and who have been the cause of our admiration. What is more remarkable is the large number of eminent persons one rubs shoulders with here, and who are not of the same rank.

Not the least of the striking features of London is the absence of ostentation with which the great are distinguished. The aristocrat everything is overshadowed by unimposed

Germany to an extent that would be insupportable in any other country. The element of superiority, in London the military element is rarely seen; officers do not appear in uniform, and the only uniforms worn are civil uniforms or decorations worn except on State occasions. The greatest men in the world, and the most distinguished of other folk without salutes, escorts, or other paraphernalia. The absence of the military element in Germany is contrasted with every turn in Europe, and without whom apparently nothing can be done. It is a tribute to the ingrained sense of orderliness (a by-product of the military) that the Germans, they practically manage themselves in everything. Politeness, too, among the Germans is a thing to be noted. Servants, such as rail and tramway men, bus conductors, and cabmen, is as common as a politeness stimulus in New York.

The lack of ostentation contributes to debase the value of things. One quickly and quietly, the value of time standing at its highest. The value of the "Café de la Paix" and the Ministers of State, which deal with imand whose decisions govern the course of a mighty Empire, are held in a modest building, in a quiet street, in a suburb at the far end, situated off the magnificent thoroughfare of Parliament-street, and known as Downing-street, No. 10. It is the residence of the Prime Minister, but no sentries pace its unguarded front.

It is a commonplace and thousands of people who would not live out of London upon any consideration, and assert it affords all the advantages of a country residence, and all the advantages the Londoner enjoys have been hinted at. He is, indeed, exceedingly catered for, and he is not obliged to leave his pleasures being not only at the centre of things, but where a few hours will suffice to traverse the whole of the British Empire, and to visit, so affording fresh means for expanding his knowledge and seeing of the best. From London he can reach any of the numerous islands, or any of the large provincial cities, or, when seeking relaxation, to one of the hundred and fifty or more of the numerous islands of the whole of the coast of England at intervals of a few miles, and yield a combination of the most attractive with the charms of the country.

It is settling down to the fact that the Londoner that he is more important of Australia but the information he gets about this continent is very piecemeal, incoherent, and, unfortunately, very biased. He has to make a special study of the place, and his time is limited. His newspaper is full of news from all over the world, and the European subjects of importance. Still, what news is sent from Australia he reads. He knows that the continent is bothered by the divergencies of so many separate State Governments and Parliaments, and that the Federal Assembly, often creates apparent anomalies, and breeds confusion in the mind of the people. He knows that the conditions. With all the good in the world, Australia is not very much like an object of admiration, though the general scope. He knows that the whole continent is a vast, empty, and desolate place, and although he is aware it has several fine cities on par with the best of the world, he knows that the people have never told him enough about themselves to enable him to perfectly appreciate them. He knows that the people of Australia, in this place, and is proud of it.

MEMORIES OF EIGHT PARLIAMENTS.

REMINISCENCES OF HENRY LUCY.

On a notable day for Mr. Lucy Lord Rosebery remarked "on anything relating to Parliament Mr. Lucy races as an expert, and it is perhaps no man living who has had so constant and so clear observation of Parliament as Mr. Lucy." The remark was one that appreciation was justified all who know Mr. Lucy and his work will admit. A new volume of his reminiscences of eight Parliaments of delight in "Memories of Eight Parliaments" (Heinemann) he depicts rather than tells. The work is divided into two parts—men and manners. In the first we have sketches of five Prime Ministers, viz., Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Disraeli, the Marquis of Salisbury, Earl of Rosebery, and Mr. Arthur Balfour. The second part is of special interest for Mr. Chamberlain, Sir Stafford Northcliffe, into a room. "Bowlers and bilcockies, back to the soft, back to the soft, in a crowded house. . . . Worst still, straw hat has been worn under the eye of the Speaker." The humour of this classic stage makes an amusing comment on the fact that Mr. Lucy goes on to be the first of the queue to leave the chamber. Melodramatic moments follow—as when Bradlaugh was elected, an episode dealt with in telling fashion. A section is given to recollections of Mr. Lucy's time in Parliament with its new and significant party members. The Labour members are praised as "commendably brief," Parliamentary members as "ardour and energy," and the Conservatives as "unimpressive"; but Mr. Lucy is not in this respect an unerring praiser of times gone by. In the concluding chapters an interesting comparison is made between the House of Commons in Washington. Mr. Lucy's book is one to be shucked over in an armchair.

Mr. James Purner writes:-The count throughout the late rain during February was 18 inches. The plants are all up, some of which had 12 inches vegetation of which has grown amazingly. In paddy fields the rice is growing out, and the water is high. In a small paddied area on my estate, patches of the grass have grown since the rain up to five feet high, and the water is still standing. There is no grass to beat it for all kinds of stock stands both frosts and droughts. It is best to first well work the ground and plant the seed at least three or four feet apart, planted by 3ft apart, in three years the plants will have mot, and with the seed tramping, the ground will be well covered. The plants will be planted out in the next ten acres of natural grass. Then the grower has the option of turning it into his own use, or cutting, the stubble will have been cut off, and the stock can be turned in without injury to them.

THE CHURCHES.

The annual meeting of the Sydney Church Endowment Fund was held in the Chaplain's House on Tuesday. Archdeacon Gunther, Vice-Chancellor, was in the chair. The report was of a satisfactory character. It showed that during the year ended December 31, 1906 the committee, in addition to the ordinary and business appertaining to the fund, the careful consideration several applications for the purchase of sites for church buildings, and as a result of their consideration, suitable allotment had been secured at Alexandria (studying buildings), Cronulla, Thorleigh, Caringbah, and other places.

ton, Haberfield, and Kensington, on the one hand, and the two of which buildings were already in course of erection. The total cost of these was £1411 2s, on which the various parochial authorities pay interest at the rate of 3 per cent. The committee reported that some of the sites purchased in recent years had improved in value that greatly increased prices could now be readily obtained. The increase in the fund during the year was £3

At a meeting of the general committee at the Home of Peace, held yesterday afternoon, Archdeacon Dixon presided. The treasurer's statement, the acting deaconess superintendent's report, with that of the house committee, were read and approved. The Rev. George Middleton, a candidate for the ministry, was presented by the Rev. George Middleton, a candidate for the ministry, was presented by the Rev. C. C. Dunstan.

A large number of members of the Junior Clerical Society met last week by invitation the Rev. G. A. D'Arcy-Irvine at Holy Trinity Church, Sydney, for a special service, and afterwards at the rectory and the school hall.

The Rev. H. Saumarez Smith, recently appointed acting warden of St. Paul's College, with the University of Sydney, read a paper, "Prayer Book Revision," and indicated certain changes which he thought might well be made in the Book of Common Prayer. Most of the clergy, who were present, took part.

G. D'Arcy-Irvine, in closing the discussion from the chair, said that just as the Protestant Episcopal Church of America, and the Church of England had revised the "Prayer Book" as soon as they had had power to do so; so he believed that the Church of England in Australia would be prepared to

Rev. R. H. Pitt Owen, who has been transferred from Dural to Rouse Hill, was the recipient of many tokens of appreciation of his work on his departure from the former place. The gifts included a silver pocket compass.

Rev. E. A. Colvin, of Holy Trinity, Dulwich Hill, who has been absent in England for the last 12 months, returned to Sydney on Tuesday by the steamer Persic. Although on holiday, he has brought back a great number of service, a toilet case, containing silver-mounted brushes and comb, and a purse of sovereigns.

The standing committees of the Presbyteries and the General Assembly begin their sittings at the same time. The church offices on Monday, being the last day of meetings in the Assembly's financial year.

feet, and has had electric power attached to it. The doors of entrance and exit are in number, and more than meet the demands of the city authorities, making the Lyceum Hall one of the safest buildings in the Commonwealth. The smaller, or conference hall, will seat 600 people, and will be amply large enough for all Central Methodist Mission week-day meetings, and for the annual synod.

The sittings of the Presbyterian State General Assembly will be held in St. Stephen Church, Phillip-street, beginning on the first Tuesday of May.

Methodist Church in this State, writes the "Methodist," the Rev. Charles Stead, chairman of the Illawarra district, becoming "the father of the conference" of those still active work. Mr. Stead has "travelled" 25 years, and is still going strongly. The oldest minister in connection with the conference is the Rev. Charles Waters, of Epping, whose record dates back to 1851. Of 28 ministers whose status exceeds 40 years only four are

The Rev. T. R. Osborne and Mrs. Osborne, Methodist Church missionaries, leave Sydney on return to their mission field in New Britain on Friday.

A change has been made in connection with the Hay Methodist circuit. The Rev. A. Brown, of Rylstone, was appointed to Hay for the conference, but owing to the serious illness of his wife it has been decided that he shall remain another year at Rylstone. The Rev. H. E. Ballhouse will take the Hay circuit.

THE GALLERY AT SALEROMBS.

JAMES R. LAWSON AND LITTLE,
 128-130 Pitt-street, near King-street.

SPECIAL NOTE.

This sale presents a unique opportunity not only of purchasing the artist's work at auction, but it will be the last, and only chance the public of Sydney will have of securing an example of Mr. Platt's work, as he has definitely decided to leave the State for the purpose of continuing his studies under more favourable conditions.

Mr. Platt has been a constant exhibitor at the ART SOCIETY'S EXHIBITIONS, and has always been most favourably reported.
